RIVER RISING AND TRACKS SUBMERGED

Trains Are Going Over Northwestern's Line as Far as Fremont, While the Overflow Lasts.

Owing to the fact that the Union Pacific bridge near Mercer is out, all trains on that line are running as far west as Frenont over the Northwestern tracks. The Platte river is reported to be rising very rapidly and word received Friday morning that the water had begun to run across the Union Pacific tracks near Mercer. If the river continues to rise it probably will be some time before the tracks between here and Fremont can be used.

To View Effects of Water.

The county commissioners were at Valley to look over the situation with regard to the high water and floating ice which is threatening the bridges in that vicinity They were accompanied by County Surveyor Edquist. No further damage has as yet resulted to the Whitney bridge over the Elkhorn, and the board will look this over also, to determine if possible if some permanent change cannot be made whereby the yearly menace to the bridge from the ice and water may be obviated.

The necessary soundings were made at East Omaha Thursday for the plans to be submitted to the government engineer when he shall come to lay out the work of the temporary restrainment of the encroachments of the Missouri at certain places in its course through that city.
